South Asian Students
Mango Season in Full Swing

South Asian Students,

The mango season has arrived in full swing, with the promise of sweet, juicy flavors and vibrant colors. The first mango of the season, known as the "King of Fruits," is celebrated with joy and enthusiasm across South Asia. The fruit's season typically lasts from April to June, depending on the region and variety. River-side mango stalls, a popular choice among South Asians, offer a delightful assortment of mango varieties. From the tangy Alphonso to the aromatic Langra, there is something for everyone to enjoy.

The mango season is not just about enjoying the fruit; it's also about celebrating the diversity of South Asian cultures through traditional dishes and festivities. The mango juice, known as "amrasa," is a popular refreshment that is often served at social gatherings. The mango pickle, "amrasa ka achar," is another delicious treat that is relished throughout the season.

As the mango season reaches its peak, it's important to remember the importance of maintaining food safety. The mango stones should be disposed of properly to avoid injury, and fresh fruits should be washed thoroughly to prevent the spread of bacteria.

South Asian students around the world celebrate the mango season by incorporating it into their daily meals and recipes. From mango chutney to mango lassi, the mango season is a time for indulgence and enjoyment. The vibrant colors and sweet aromas of mangoes add a cheerful touch to the otherwise monotonous winter months.

In conclusion, the mango season is an eagerly anticipated event in South Asia, celebrated with traditional dishes and festivities. It's a time to savor the beauty of nature and enjoy the refreshing flavors of the beloved "King of Fruits."
